

EBSCOhost Guide

EBSCOhost's is an online research platform that has multiple databases. A database is a searchable collection of information. Some databases cover many subjects—such as Academic Search Ultimate (e.g. Anthropology, Chemistry, Music, Psychology, Zoology). Some databases cover only one or two subjects—such as Philosopher's Index with Full Text (Religion and Philosophy). Each EBSCOhost database is unique and may contain different sources. For example, Academic Search Ultimate contains academic journals, magazines, trade publications, news, reviews, journals, books, biographies, primary source documents, reports, government documents, and pamphlets while Philosopher's Index with Full Text only contains academic journals, books, and book reviews. Both of the databases mentioned—and many more—can be searched simultaneously.

Use this guide to access and search EBSCOhost.

☞ EBSCOhost is particularly helpful after you have done some introductory research. Use a dictionary to define key terms and consult an encyclopedia to find a topical overview or history. This introductory research will enhance your EBSCOhost search.
